VA Questions And Answers

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q Am I entitled to hospitalization at a Veterans Administration facility as the widow of a deceased veteran?

A - No. Only veterans may be entitled to hospitalization at a VA facility.

Q - Can the spouse of a veteran qualify for civil service preference based on the veteran's military service?

A - The spouse of a 10-point veteran, who because of a service - connected disability has been unable to qualify for any appointment in the federal civil service, is entitled to a 10-point preference. At such time that the veteran should be able to use this preference, it would be rescinded from the spouse.

Then & Now

Something Is Going On

No, I am more than a house: I am a home. Yes, that's it, a home!

For many years generation after generation of the same family has called my walls and roof 'home'. It's kind of a good feeling - - we have gotten used to each other, this family and I.

So many times when there was trouble I have been a haven of rest and safety; when there was cause for rejoicing, my walls rang with laughter.

As one generation grew up, and moved away there were changes in the physical structure of the house as it was updated and remodeled to suit the new generation. The occupants, however, were always members of the same family. I was handed down and down and down, with love. That's the way it should be, don't you think? That is, if that's the way the families want it.

How many times has the stairway in the front hall been 'decked out' with red ribbon and Christmas greens? How many generations of youngsters have peeked down the stairs on Christmas night, trying desperately to get a look at Santa as he unloaded his treasures. A long time ago the tree had been one that Papa had cut in the forest behind the house; in more recent years Dad had hauled the artificial tree down from its storage place in the attic.

I wonder, (that is, if a house can wonder!), just how many little girls, on a cold rainy day have snuggled in my window seat, hugging their favorite dolls, safe in the knowledge that no matter how stormy the weather outside, they were safe because they were "at home."

How many generations of little boys, and maybe some big ones too, have played ball in the meadow behind the house? The creek behind the house could really tell some tales if creeks could talk; generation after generation of little boys had trudged, tired but happy, up the hill after an afternoon of fishing or wading.

The lilac bush next to the kitchen door, planted lovingly by one of the first inhabitants, has been pruned, prodded, fertilized and even broken for bouquets. Still, the fragance of its blossoms each spring fill the house and surrounding area with a sweetness unlike any other.

It's been kind of hard being a house: the elements have taken their toll even with the best of care given by those who have called this house 'home.' Then too, about time you get used to one generation of a family it's time to change, and another generation has 'sprung up' with ideas of their own, but change is part of life.

Now change is not too bad; in fact, if the family wanted to sell me and let someone entirely new come in, I wouldn't mind too much - - that is, if I knew that was what the family really wanted. But lately, something else has been going on, and I don't think I like it.

The family belonging to me is very concerned; various propositions have been made, and ideas discussed but it always seems to come out that someone else is going to take me over. Some people say it is the government, something to do with the park service; I don't really know. All I know is I am a home; for years I have been 'home' to generation after generation of the same family and now that is all changed and I don't know what is going to happen. Do You?

SMSA Changes May Effect County

The possible elimination of Amherst and Appomattox counties from the Lynchburg Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA) as proposed by the U. S. Department of Commerce could severely affect product distribution in the area, businessmen believe.

The Lynchburg SMSA now includes the City of Lynchburg and Amherst, Appomattox and Campbell Counties. The Commerce Department has proposed new criteria for designating SMSAs, indicating that rural counties be excluded.

The SMSA is used in the overall national scheme of marketing to determine allocation of advertising money. Shrinking the SMSA by one or two counties could, therefore, affect the national marketing distribution pattern.

"The potential shrinking of the number of products and advertising dollars coming into the area could cause a well-felt impact on the business community," according to Roger Divens, president and general manager of WSET-TV.

Divins noted that the affects could be felt on the automotive industry, the agricultural community and large chain department and grocery store as well as on the newspaper and television industry.

The Central Virginia Planning District Commission has opposed the change in SMSA designation mainly because areas that would be affected have not been given enough time to review or comment on proposals.

The proposed changes were published in May in the Commerce Department's Statistical Reporter. Persons in the Central Virginia region only learned of the proposed criteria through the Federal Register during the last week in June.

During a public hearing held in Washington July 20 by the Department of Commerce, the comment period on the proposed new requirements was extended to August 15 from the original deadline of July 24.

The CVPDC expressed concern that the impact of the proposed change has not been fully determined and that attention has not been given to the unique needs of Virginia counties and cities.

Exclusion of one or both of the jurisdictions would disrupt the continuity of data collected at the regional, local and state levels, as less data is collected by the U. S. Census Bureau outside SMSAs. The removal of counties from the SMSA could also jeopardize areas' abilities to qualify for federal and state grant programs. For example, with Community Development Block Grants, 80 percent of funds are provided to metropolitan areas and 20 percent to non-metropolitan areas.

Persons interested in further information may contact Ted McCormack, principal regional planner for the CVPDC, at 804-845-3491.
